BRITISH CLAIM

GERMAN BATTLESHIP HIT FROM AIR

BRITISH Coastal Command 'planes early yesterday attacked a German pocket battleship, and claim to have scored at least one hit with a half-ton torpedo.

The battleship, either the Deutschland or the Admiral Scheer, was brought to a standstill off Mandal, the most southern point of Norway, and later was seen moving towards the Skaggerak, accompanied by destroyers, travelling at greatly reduced speed.

The following is the British Air Ministry communiqué:—

"Shortly before midnight last night (Thursday) a Blenheim aircraft of the Coastal Command, on reconnaissance off the Southern coast of Norway, sighted an enemy pocket battleship, escorted by a number of destroyers.

"A striking force was despatched by the Coastal Command, and in the early hours of this morning the battleship, then off Egersund, was hit by a torpedo from a Beaufort aircraft. Dense clouds of white smoke rose from the vessel and prevented accurate observation by other aircraft of the results of their attacks.

"Soon after 10 o'clock this morning the battleship was stationary some miles off Mandal on the most southern point of Norway, and later the whole force was observed to be retiring towards the Skaggerak at greatly reduced speed.

"One of our aircraft is missing from these operations, and one enemy flying boat was destroyed by a Hudson reconnaissance aircraft."

The British Air Ministry News Service states that the German pocket battleship was heading north screened by five destroyers, and says it was hit amidships by one torpedo dropped at less than 100 feet, and that the attack was carried out with such surprising suddenness that the 'plane escaped without a shot being fired.

TRUER SPIRIT OF GOOD-WILL

NORTHERN PREMIER'S HOPE

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.
ENNISKILLEN, Friday.

Relations between Northern and Southern Ireland were mentioned by Mr. J. M. Andrews, Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, in the course of his speech to-day at the annual meeting of Fermanagh Unionist Association.

Mr. Andrews said that he made no post-war promises. Among the things he hoped for was that it might be possible to develop throughout all Ireland a better and truer spirit of goodwill. But this would be only possible when the minority in the North recognised the authority of the Constitution under which they lived, as the minority in the South had loyally done, and if each Government scrupulously refrained from intervention in the affairs of the other.

However that might be, they in Ulster were determined to maintain equal citizenship within the United Kingdom and Empire both in times of peace and war.

MR. DE VALERA TO VISIT ENNIS

Mr. de Valera, says our Ennis Correspondent, has accepted an invitation to attend a conference of County Clare Fianna Fail leaders at Ennis on Saturday, June 28.

5,394 RAID DEATHS IN MAY

Air-raid casualty figures in Britain for May, issued yesterday by the Ministry of Home Security, reveal that 5,394 people were killed and 5,181 injured and detained in hospital.

Of the persons killed 2,512 were men, 1,994 women, 753 children under 16 and 135 unclassified.

In addition 75 persons—31 men, 25 women and 19 children—are missing, believed killed.

SLIGO MURDER CHARGE

FURTHER REMAND

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.
SLIGO, Friday.

When the case was called at Sligo Court to-day in which Patrick Kelly, aged 31, farm labourer of Riverstown, County Sligo is charged with the wilful murder of Mary Breheny, aged 37, spinster, of Rossmore, on the night of April 17 last, Superintendent P. Devine, Ballymote, applied for a week's remand. It was stated that it was expected to have the State case concluded at the resumed hearing.

The District Justice remanded the accused man in custody.

MINISTER ON GERMAN SUBMARINE LOSSES

Mr. Ernest Bevin, British Minister of Labour, gave these two items of news last night:—

"The Navy has sunk dozens of submarines that have suddenly come out in the Atlantic," he said, "and the day is not far distant when we will be equally safe at night from bombing attacks as we are now during the daytime."

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

One case of foot-and-mouth disease was reported yesterday from Modeshill, Co. Tipperary.

£20,000 ACTION DISMISSED

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE HANNA.)

Reserved judgment was given, dismissing with costs, the action of the Bank of Ireland against John Charles Hart, a ward of court, Westmere, Western road, Cork, by his committee Alexander Martin Healy, solicitor, Grand Parade, Cork, claiming £20,000 and interest under a guarantee of March 31, 1938, whereby Mr. Hart guaranteed the liabilities of his brother, Vincent Hart, Lower Glanmire road, Cork, who died in January, 1939.

It was pleaded in defence that if Mr. Hart signed the guarantee he was not at the time capable of appreciating the effect of it, and that that was well-known to the Bank.

Mr. Justice Hanna refused a stay of execution.

Mr. Lavery, K.C.; Mr. McGonigal, K.C. and Mr. Marnan (instructed by Mr. D. B. Gilmore) appeared for the Bank; and Mr. Vincent Rice, K.C.; Mr. J. M. Fitzgerald, K.C. and Mr. Healy (instructed by Messrs. D. D. MacDonald and Co.) for Mr. Hart.

Mr. Justice Hanna said that John Charles Hart had been an Army doctor, and in 1914 he returned to Cork broken down in health. He was known as Captain Jack, and had been well-known in the sporting life of Cork: he had been an international cricketer and a familiar figure in the Cork Club and in the Sunday's Well Club. In 1932 he had had a complete breakdown, which had been progressive ever since. He had an extraordinary affection for his brother Vincent, and suffered under the delusion that he had done him a grievous wrong, for which he was bound to make retribution.

He was quite satisfied on the evidence that Captain Jack, at the time of the signing of the guarantee, was not capable of appreciating its effect, and that the Bank's agents knew that.

SPECIAL COURT SITTING

When convicted by the Special Criminal Court yesterday of illegal possession of a Colt .45 revolver and four rounds of ammunition, Thomas Finglas, of 155 Hardman's Gardens, Drogheda, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

For refusing to give an account of his movements during a specified period, Terence McLoughlin, Corlara, Drumsna, County Roscommon, was sent to prison for four months.

A postman, William Casey, of Kilglass, Mitchelstown, who pleaded not guilty to membership of an illegal organisation, was acquitted, after the Court had heard evidence from a handwriting expert regarding a letter addressed to the O.C. of an illegal organisation and signed "I.O." Questioned by the President of the Court, the expert said that, while there were some dissimilarities between the writing on the letter and a specimen of Casey's handwriting, he considered that the two documents were written by the same person. State Counsel (Mr. Oliver Moriarty, K.C.) suggested that Casey was an intelligence officer in the illegal organisation, but Casey denied (in evidence) that he was a member of that body.

The Court announced that there was some doubt in the case, and they would give Casey the benefit of it.

AT GATES OF DAMASCUS

TALKS TO AVOID BLOODSHED

General Wavell Says: 'Progress Everywhere'

WHILE a report from Cairo yesterday stated that Damascus, the chief city of Syria, had been virtually surrounded by de Gaullist forces, and that entry to the city had been delayed pending the result of parleys, with a view to avoiding bloodshed, General Wavell's headquarters communiqué made no reference to Damascus.

It claimed that further progress had been made in all sectors of British forces penetration.

Earlier it was stated in London that General de Gaulle's forces were gradually encircling Kiswe, the fortified French position, ten miles to the South which forms the key to Damascus.

On the other hand, it is claimed in Vichy that after six days' fighting the deepest penetration by the Allied forces into Syria and the Lebanon is fifty miles; that at Kiswe the de Gaulle forces have come up against the chief French line of resistance and have been stopped, and that Allied forces on the coast have been halted south of Sidon.

An American broadcast early this morning stated that the evacuation of Damascus had begun.

BIG AIR ATTACK ON RUHR

BUILDINGS DESTROYED AND FIRES STARTED

PRESS ASSOCIATION.

THE Ruhr had its heaviest attack of the war yesterday morning, says the British Air Ministry News Service. From soon after midnight aircraft of the Bomber Command were out in great force over the comparatively small area in which Germany's heaviest industries are almost entirely concentrated.

The district is closely set with industrial towns, and about one-tenth of the whole population of Germany lives and works there. A network of roads, rails and canals provides a highly organised system of transport, a self-contained system linked with, both east and west through a number of vulnerable bottle-necks.

Wave after wave of British aircraft made a sweep of the Ruhr, often coming down through the clouds and dropping flares to light the ground below. Several aircraft bombed from so low an altitude that their crews distinctly felt the concussion of their heavier bombs, and many were able to see fragments of masonry blown into the air. Buildings were sharply silhouetted against walls of fire; warehouses could be seen completely gutted, and whole areas were often lit by flames.

At one vital railway yard the bursting of a bomb was followed by a succession of explosions in line, one after the other, over a period of ten minutes, as though a store of ammunition was hit.

BRITISH REPORT

A British Air Ministry communiqué describing the raids says:—

"On Thursday night a very large force of aircraft of the Bomber Command carried out a successful attack on industrial targets in the Ruhr. The attack was the heaviest carried out in a single night on this industrial area, and a great weight of bombs was dropped.

"Many industrial buildings were destroyed by high explosive bombs, and a large number of fires were started. Six aircraft of the Bomber Command are missing.

"Aircraft of the Coastal Command on Thursday night attacked the docks at Brest, Antwerp, and targets near Rotterdam. One aircraft of the Coastal Command is missing from these operations."

BLENHEIM FIGHTS MESSERSCHMITTS

After a great fight by a Coastal Command Blenheim against three Messerschmitts 109's, one of the German 'planes was hit and set on fire by ship's guns, and the other two broke off the fight. Yesterday's Admiralty communiqué, giving details of the action, states:—

"When a Blenheim aircraft of the Coastal Command was attacked by three Messerschmitts 109's in the vicinity of one of our convoys on Thursday evening, the enemy aircraft were at once hotly engaged by the anti-aircraft guns of the ships in convoy and of the escorts.

"One of the Messerschmitts received direct hits, and when last seen was on fire and losing height. The other two enemy fighters were driven off.

"A report from the senior officer of the convoy escort states that the Blenheim put up a wonderful fight and is undamaged."

FEW DAY RAIDS ON BRITAIN

The British Air Ministry and Ministry of Home Security communiqué last night stated:—

"A few enemy aircraft have made brief landfalls to-day, mainly in South and South-East England. Late this afternoon bombs were dropped near the south coast. These caused neither casualties nor damage.

"This afternoon two enemy bombers were shot down into the sea off the south-east coast by our fighters."

FRENCH CABINET MEETS

Allied forces pushing northwards along the coast are reported from Cairo to be in the environs of ancient Sidon, some 25 miles south of the port of Beirut. In Northern Syria Aleppo is threatened by another Allied column moving westwards, close to the Turkish frontier and, according to latest information from Jerusalem, nearing the border town of Ras el Ain. British troops advancing along the Euphrates, it is confirmed, have reached Deir ez Zor in Eastern Syria, to the north-east of the important Palmyra airfield on the pipeline to Tripoli.

Meanwhile, the French Cabinet met yesterday, under the presidency of Marshal Pétain. As in London the French Note on events in Syria and the memorandum which Sir Samuel Hoare, British Ambassador in Madrid, has been instructed to hand to the French Envoy there in reply were published. The British Government has told France that the "responsibility for the consequences of the assistance which the French authorities in Syria were instructed to render the enemies of His Majesty must rest with Marshal Pétain's Government."

The memorandum says that "it is not our desire that French blood shall be shed," and suggests that it would be in the interests of both countries if the French forces were told to offer no resistance to British measures to prevent Germany from using Syria as a base.

The French Note declares that there has been "no collaboration between the French and Germans in Syria," and that all German air material and personnel had been withdrawn, except for two or three damaged 'planes, and about ten men. The Note adds that the British attack "risks producing the gravest consequences," and that France will defend its possessions with every means.

The British reply repeats that Britain has no territorial designs in Syria or anywhere in French overseas possessions, and that "it is their intention when victory is won to restore the independence and greatness of France."

EVACUATION OF DAMASCUS BEGUN

The evacuation of Damascus—almost surrounded by Allied troops—has begun, according to Winston Burdett, Columbia Broadcasting System's correspondent in Ankara, this morning.

The evacuation is being carried out by order of the French military authorities, with whom the British are hoping to negotiate a surrender. British motorised forces, the correspondent adds, have penetrated the outer defences of Kiswe, ten miles south of Damascus. On the coast road to Beirut the British have reached the main French artillery defences.

"KISWE FINALLY TAKEN"

Martin Agronsky later said that Kiswe, "where the French have been putting up their hardest resistance," has been "finally taken" by the British.

FRENCH CLAIMS

The Vichy News Agency claims that after six days' fighting, the deepest penetration of Allied forces into Syria and the Lebanon is fifty miles. This advance has been made between Adraa, on the Transjordan frontier, and Kiswe, 12 miles south of Damascus.

At Kiswe General de Gaulle's men have come up against the French troops' chief line of resistance. This defence line runs along a lava bed, forming a steep slope between fifteen and twenty yards high. The de Gaullists, it is claimed, have been completely stopped there, all attacks, even when carried out with tanks, being broken.

Allied forces advancing along the coast have been stopped six miles south of Sidon, the Agency says.

"MASSIVE" HELP

In this sector the Australians were able to overcome the first French line of resistance on the River Litani, 19 miles from the frontier, "thanks to an intense bombardment by the British Fleet." It is claimed that in the last four days the Australians have only gained a further twelve miles along the coast, although the Navy's help has remained "massive."

After losses suffered at the opening of hostilities, the Agency says, the R.A.F. "is now only carrying out reconnaissances at a very great height by day, and prudent bombing attacks by night."

GENERAL DENTZ PROMOTED

Marshal Pétain has raised General Dentz, French High Commissioner in Syria, to the rank of General Commanding an Army, Toulouse Radio announced last night. The promotion is described as a "tribute to the cool mastery with which General Dentz had faced the present situation in Syria."

JUNKERS SHOT DOWN

A communiqué broadcast by Cairo Radio last night states:—

"This afternoon Australian Air Force machines shot down three Junkers 88s and damaged others near the coast of Syria. Australian fighters attacked eight or nine Junkers 88s, bearing Italian distinguishing marks, which had intended attacking a naval squadron three miles west of Sidon. Four of the enemy 'planes dived and dropped their bombs, but the remainder jettisoned their loads and retreated hastily.

"The Australian fighters shot down four Junkers 88s, and serious damage was inflicted on others, one of which flew off with its wing on fire. The Australians suffered no loss or damage."—Press Association.

FACING THREE CHOICES

PEACE, INVASION OR SOVIET PACT

PRESS ASSOCIATION.
MADRID, Friday.

Germany, writes a Spanish correspondent in Berlin in a despatch to the Tangier newspaper Espana, is faced with a choice of three courses of action—

1. Agreement with Russia for the exploitation of her European territory, or the use of her resources with a view to a long war.

2. Peace, provided the initiative comes from the other side.

3. A direction offensive against Britain.

"There is," he says, "no one in Germany who is not convinced that, so long as Mr. Churchill is Prime Minister, final victory can only be won by a direct and victorious offensive against the island, which is the heart and brain of the British Empire."

The loss of Suez, the correspondent continues, would be a severe blow to Britain, but the mass of the German people do not think that victory there can be achieved immediately. Therefore, in view of the victory in Crete, they think that an offensive against Britain is the most probable next step. So great is German confidence in the power of the Luftwaffe, he says, that 90 per cent. of them would vote for an immediate attack against Britain.

The same correspondent, however, also hints at great Russo-German activity.

The correspondent expresses the opinion that the matter will be clarified during the week-end.

THE TORPEDOED ROBIN MOOR

MR. SUMNER WELLES'S COMMENTS

ASSERTING that the facts about the sinking of the United States steamer Robin Moor by a German U-boat were beyond dispute, Mr. Sumner Welles, Assistant U.S. Secretary of State, yesterday in Washington indirectly accused Germany of violating an international treaty on submarine warfare.

CLEAR EVIDENCE

Speaking at a Press conference, Mr. Sumner Welles said that the evidence given by survivors from the Robin Moor was very clear. As to what action the United States would take, he would withhold a considered statement until the full depositions of the survivors had been received and investigated.

Asked to comment on the statement of a German spokesman in Berlin to the effect that "We will not be buffaloed by American and British discussions concerning the Robin Moor, and whenever any ship with contraband sails to England we will shoot at it," Mr. Sumner Welles said:—"The question, what constitutes contraband, is one of the most controversial in all the world, and the United States Government has never acquiesced in the contraband definitions of either side in the present war."

WHERE U.S. STANDS

What the United States does stand on very firmly, declared Mr. Sumner Welles, is that Germany and the United States are parties to the international agreement of 1930, under which submarines are bound to take proper precautions to ensure the safety of the crews and passengers of any merchantman before it is sunk. In the case of the Robin Moor, he added, the facts spoke for themselves.

Asked how the incident might affect President Roosevelt's recent reassertion of the doctrine of the freedom of the seas, Mr. Sumner Welles said that the President's statement spoke for itself. He emphasised that every detail of the sinking received has been made public, and that practice would be continued.

No official expression of opinion from the President can be expected until complete details had been received in the capital, Mr. Stephen Early, his Secretary, stated to-day.

PRESS ASSOCIATION.
BERLIN, Friday.

Authoritative German quarters decline to comment on the sinking until the necessary confirmation of the circumstances has been received.

WEDDING

MR. A. DONNELLY AND MISS E. O'CONNOR

The wedding took place on Wednesday at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Donnybrook, of Mr. Alan Donnelly, eldest son of Mr. Andrew Donnelly, M.R.C.V.S., and Mrs. Donnelly, Harpur House, Drogheda, and Miss Eileen O'Connor, only daughter of Professor J. J. O'Connor, M.R.C.V.S., and Mrs. O'Connor, 116 Morehampton road, Dublin. The church was decorated with pink carnations and narcissus.

The Service was conducted by the Very Rev. Monsignor Molony, P.P., LL.D., assisted by the Rev. J. J. Matthews, C.C., and the Rev. P. Drake, Adm., St. Mary's, Navan.

The bride was given away by her father.

There were four bridesmaids—the Misses Mary and Dagmar Donnolly (sisters of the bridegroom), Miss Sheila White and Miss Sheila Manning, and the pages were Miss Gillian Deeny, Lurgan, and Master Oliver Woods, Armagh.

Mr. Arthur Donnelly, brother of the bridegroom, acted as best man, and the groomsmen in the church were Mr. Desmond O'Connor, Mr. Shane Donnelly and Professor William Byrne.

"WRITERS' AND ARTISTS' TRADE UNION"

On May 27th we printed a letter from a correspondent, signed "A Realist Journalist," on the subject of "Writers' and Artists' Trade Union," in the course of which our correspondent criticised the rates of remuneration alleged to be paid by "the editor of a paper representing a community which, in the middle of a world war, is building itself a new and costly building."

We are informed that the Superior-General of the Maynooth Mission to China, of St. Columban's, Navan, Co. Meath, takes exception to our correspondent's remarks, inasmuch as the community to which he belongs publishes a journal known as the Far East, and is engaged at the moment in the erection of a new and costly building. The community is widely known, and its journal has the widest circulation in Ireland of any journal of its kind, as well as a large circulation abroad.

We wish to assure the Superior-General of the Maynooth Mission that the statements in our correspondent's letter had no reference to St. Columban's community, to the Far East, or to its editor; and we regret very much that he, or members of the community, should have suffered annoyance or inconvenience through its publication in our columns.

Presentation.—Mr. W. T. Simpson, Dublin, Port Missionary, was presented at the Sailors' Rest last night with a clock, suitably inscribed, to mark his departure to his new post as manager of the Goodwill Restaurant under the Wylie Scheme. He is succeeded by Mr. James Bowie.

Gardeners and Food Production.—An appeal to amateur gardeners to intensify food production in their gardens was made at the annual meeting of the North Dublin Horticultural Society last night by Mr. H. J. McDonagh (vice-president). To assist this campaign, said the honorary secretary (Mr. John Taylor), the Society's Show on August 16th will be mainly devoted to fruit and vegetables. The retiring Council and its officers were re-elected, with the addition of Mr. Thomas Shaw, in succession to his father, the late Mr. Tom Shaw.

"SENSELESS RUMOURS"

SOVIET DENIAL OF WAR PREPARATIONS

SOVIET RUSSIA last night officially denied "senseless" rumours that Germany has made demands on the Soviet Union; negotiations for a new pact have taken place, and that the U.S.S.R. is preparing for war with Germany.

THE STATEMENT

A statement broadcast by Moscow Radio branded the rumours as a piece of "clumsily concocted propaganda by forces hostile to Germany and the U.S.S.R." The rumours, it added, became "particularly insistent after the arrival in London of Sir Stafford Cripps, the British Ambassador to Moscow." The statement says:—

"1.—Germany has not presented any demands to the U.S.S.R., and no negotiations could, therefore, have taken place.

"2.—Germany is fulfilling the terms of the Soviet-German Pact just as unfailingly as the Soviet Union. Movements of German troops on Germany's Eastern frontier must be due to other reasons which have nothing to do with Soviet-German relations.

"3.—The Soviet Union observes, and intends to observe, the terms of the German-Soviet Pact, and all rumours of its preparations for war with Germany are devoid of any foundation.

"4.—Recent mobilisation of reserves and manœuvres had for their object the training of reserve contingents and the checking-up of the working of the railway system, and to represent these operations as hostile to Germany is, to say the least, absurd."

An Associated Press message states that the Tass Agency has been authorised to declare:—

"These rumours are transparent propaganda spread by Powers hostile to both the Soviet Union and Germany, Powers which are interested in spreading the war. Germany has made no demands on Russia, and has proposed no closer agreement between the two countries, therefore no negotiations could be carried on regarding such demands.

"Soviet circles are, therefore, of the opinion that the rumours that Germany intended to violate the pact and attack Soviet Russia are without foundation.

GERMAN ARMY LEAVE

PRESS ASSOCIATION.
STOCKHOLM, Friday.

All leave has been cancelled in the German Army except for maximum periods of three days in very exceptional cases, says the Berlin correspondent of the Social Demokraten. A rumour, which is unconfirmed, says that the stoppage of leave will continue until October.

All men born in the years 1900 and 1923 who have not yet done military service have been called up, the correspondent adds. The explanation given in military quarters is that the measures have been taken in order to bring the war to an end at the earliest possible moment.

NEW FRONT AGAINST BRITAIN

BERLIN, Friday.

"Germany is creating a new front against Britain on the diplomatic side," declared the German Foreign Office spokesman to-day, questioned about General Antonescu's recent visit to Hitler at Munich. "Nothing more than this can be said. This front is working day and night, in the same way as the military front."

BELGIAN ARMY'S SURRENDER

INSIDE STORY IN LONDON COURT

A "MOST sincere and respectful apology" to King Leopold of the Belgians was expressed in the King's Bench Division, London, yesterday, when a settlement was announced of a libel action brought by Admiral of the Fleet Sir Roger Keyes against the "Daily Mirror Newspapers, Ltd."

Counsel for the newspaper also apologised to Sir Roger Keyes, who was special British Liaison Officer at Belgian Headquarters before the Belgian surrender.

"It is apparent," he said, "that a very grave injustice has been done to the King of the Belgians, who, like Sir Roger Keyes, has acted throughout in accordance with the highest traditions of honour and justice."

Mr. Justice Tucker approved the settlement, which included the payment of damages and costs by the defendants.

KING'S DECISION

It was the first time that the inside story of the seven tragic days leading to the surrender of King Leopold had been told to the world. Sir Patrick Hastings, K.C., counsel for Sir Roger, explained why in May last year Sir Roger suggested suspension of judgment on King Leopold, whom he described as "a very gallant soldier" until the facts were known. Daily Mirror newspapers published on May 30 a statement criticising this advice, to which exception was taken, and subsequently a plea of fair comment was withdrawn, and damages had since been agreed.

Sir Patrick explained that within a few hours of the German invasion of Belgium on May 10 last year, Sir Roger, at the request of the British Government, flew to join King Leopold as special liaison officer, and was with the King at his headquarters until 10 p.m. on May 27, the day on which King Leopold asked for an armistice.

The following day, Mr. Churchill, announcing the surrender had taken place, asked that judgment should be suspended until the facts were known, and in the Lobby Sir Roger echoed the advice. This advice did not appeal to the persons responsible for the conduct of the Daily Mirror newspaper, said Sir Patrick, and on May 30 that paper published an attack, not only upon the King of the Belgians, but also upon Sir Roger Keyes. How far justified Sir Roger was in his advice to suspend judgment is now beginning to be understood.

"On May 20 the British Army and French Northern Army were ordered to prepare to fight to the south-west to regain contact with the main French Army, and unless the Belgian Army could conform to this movement it was clear that it would involve a breach of contact between the British and Belgian Armies. Sir Roger informed the King of the order, and he was asked to inform the British Government and Lord Gort (British C.-in-C.) that the Belgian Army had neither tanks nor aircraft and existed solely for defence. The King did not feel he had any right to expect the British Government to jeopardise perhaps the very existence of the British Army in order to keep contact with the Belgian Army, but he wished to make it quite clear that if there was a separation between the two armies the capitulation of the Belgian Army would be inevitable.

THE KING'S MESSAGE

"At the request of the French High Command the Belgian Army was withdrawn on May 23 from the strongly prepared position on the Scheldt to a much weaker and longer line on the Lys to allow the British Army to retire behind the defensive frontier line to prepare for the southward offensive. On the evening of May 26, a break through the Belgian line seemed inevitable, and the King removed the remaining French 60th Division in Belgian vehicles to a prepared position across the Yser, which by then was flooded over a wide area and its bridges mined.

"Fighting on the Belgian front had been continuous for four days, and the Belgian Army by May 27th was running short of food and ammunition, and was being attacked by at least eight German divisions, including armoured units, and wave after wave of dive-bombers. That morning the King asked Sir Roger to inform the British authorities that he would be obliged to surrender before a debacle took place. A similar message was given to the French.

GERMAN WEDGE

"By the afternoon the German Army had driven a wedge between the Belgian and British Armies. Every road, village and town in the small part of Belgium left in Belgian hands was thronged with hundreds of thousands of refugees, and men, women and children were being mercilessly bombed and machine-gunned by low-flying aircraft. In these circumstances—at 5 p.m. on the 27th—King Leopold informed the British and French authorities that he intended, at midnight, to ask for an armistice, so as to avoid further slaughter of his people.

"This message, like the earlier one, was promptly received in London and Paris, but all communications with the British Army were cut, and, though wireless messages were repeatedly made, it is now known that these did not reach the Commanders-in-Chief."

Sir Patrick said that Sir Roger, in the light of his knowledge, felt more than justified in suggesting suspension of judgment on the King, and resented the insult and injury of the article attacking him.

Mr. G. O. Slade, for the defendants, said that the papers before the Court showed how unimpeachable were the defendants' sources of information as to the conduct ascribed to the King of the Belgians in seeking an armistice. The defendants accepted the statement made by Sir Patrick, from which it would appear that unfortunately they were entirely misled.

The Judge commented:—"This libel action, unlike some others, appears to have served a most useful purpose, and resulted in statements being made which will give very wide satisfaction."

The June Bride

The great day has come and the young couple are entering into a new and fuller life, happy in their mutual relations and facing the future with confidence.

But they cannot be sure of what the years have in store for them, and the wise bridegroom takes care to see that his bride is protected from the very start from the prospect of financial distress, and makes adequate provision for the happy years of leisure they hope to enjoy together when it will be possible to retire from business.

It is easy to make the future secure at a cost well within the means of the average man by affecting a policy with the leading Irish Life Office. We offer absolute security at the lowest cost, and particulars of all classes of Life Assurance will be gladly furnished by our Representatives or on application to:

The Syrian Problem

After six days it is not easy to discover precisely what is happening in Syria. According to French sources the British and de Gaullist forces at no point have penetrated more than fifty miles into Syrian or Lebanese territory. Although they are being given "massive" assistance by the British Navy along the coast, they are being thrown back almost everywhere by the French defenders, and even the Royal Air Force is being compelled by accurate anti-aircraft fire to fly at such a height as virtually to nullify its value as a striking force. Last evening, however, the French wireless reports spoke of greatly increased pressure during the previous twenty-four hours; and there seems to be little doubt that the French people are being prepared to learn of the capture of Damascus. British and de Gaullist reports admit comparatively slow progress, but the reasons that they give differ vastly from those contained in the French bulletins. It is reasonably certain that the amount of opposition that was offered to the advancing Allies was greater and more widespread than had been expected. Marshal Pétain has enormous prestige among the French Army, and his appeal to the Syrian garrisons undoubtedly had an immediate effect on the troops in the Levant. General de Gaulle and his British comrades are anxious above all things to avoid unnecessary bloodshed. They realise the difficult position in which the French garrisons find themselves, and are fully alive to the fact that the full use of their superior force easily might defeat the whole purpose of their campaign. Neither General de Gaulle nor the British wish to fight against Frenchmen. They are convinced that there has been a certain amount of German infiltration into Syria; that Syrian and Lebanese airfields have been taken over by German ground staffs, and that the German High Command has had the intention from the start to use Syria sooner or later as a base for an attack on Egypt. In these circumstances, the invading armies have appealed for French support. They have announced that their only object is to expel the Germans from French territory; that they have no desire to fight against the French garrisons, but that any resistance to their advance will be overcome. It seems that, since the beginning of the campaign, the de Gaullists and British have been seeking to parley with the French, in order to avoid conflict, and that this fact, rather than the ferocity of the defence, has been mainly responsible for the slowness of their progress. Nevertheless, they appear to have surrounded Damascus, the fall of which is expected at any moment. Their advance troops have reached the outskirts of Sidon, about twenty-five miles south of Beirut, while in North Syria a column moving westwards along the Turkish frontier is threatening Aleppo. In East Syria British troops, operating along the Euphrates, are reported to have reached Deir Ez Zor, to the north-east of the Palmyra airfield, which guards the oil pipe-line to Tripoli. On all Syrian and Lebanese fronts the Allies' progress, if slow, has been steady; and, unless something totally unexpected happens, Syria and the Lebanon ought to be in Allied hands before the end of another week.

Marshal Pétain and his colleagues at Vichy refuse to accept the British explanation of the Syrian campaign. From the outset they have contended that a gratuitous attack has been made upon French territory; and General Dentz, the High Commissioner in Syria, has been raised to the rank of a General Commanding an Army, in recognition of the stand that he has taken against the British and de Gaullist troops. From every point of view, it is a most unfortunate business. The French Government asserts that there is no truth in the British contention that the Germans have been trying to establish themselves in Syria. It declares that such German aircraft as may have landed on Syrian soil during the Iraq revolt have left the country long ago, and that not more than ten German soldiers are in Syria or the Lebanon to-day. In their reply to the French note of protest, the text of which was published in London yesterday, the British declare that, if the French wish to avoid bloodshed, their obvious way out of the Syrian difficulty is to refrain from all resistance to the invading armies. General Wilson's forces, it is asserted, are concerned solely with the removal of German influence from Syria. Great Britain has no territorial designs in Syria or elsewhere; and it is her firm intention, when victory shall have been won, to restore the independence and greatness of France. It is a situation that bristles with difficulties and anomalies. The French at home are in a difficult position; the French in Syria are in even a worse case. A soldier's first duty is to his Government, and it would be cruelly unfair to blame the French garrisons in Syria if they resist the advance of the occupying forces. In their hearts they may sympathise with the Allied objects. The suggestion that they can have any love for their German conquerors is absurd; but, having been ordered by their Government to put up a fight against General Wilson and General Catroux, their duty as soldiers must be done. Mutatis mutandis, a like consideration applies to the Vichy Government. Marshal Pétain and his colleagues have assured the Germans on more than one occasion that the French Army still is in a position to defend the overseas Empire against all-comers. So far they have been able to prevent the occupation of any of their colonial possessions by either the Germans or the Italians—who were most anxious to seize Tunisia; and their anxiety to maintain their Empire intact until the end of the war is not difficult to understand. There can be no doubt at all that the problem of Syria has been the subject of discussion between the French Government and the Germans. Herr Hitler and his generals hardly could be expected to encourage the French to welcome General Wilson's troops in Syria with open arms; indeed, it has been suggested that Marshal Pétain has been informed that, if the French are unable to defend their colonial interests against the British, the Germans will undertake the task on their behalf. France is in a cruel dilemma; and the end is not yet. Her unhappy people are torn between two loyalties—the loyalties of head and heart; and nobody can help them to decide. It never must be forgotten that the Germans are in occupation of some three-quarters of metropolitan France, and that more than two million French soldiers are prisoners in German hands. In these two facts lies the key to the situation not only in Syria, but throughout the French dominions.

Children's Playgrounds

It is natural, and human, to pity the children of urban working-class districts and slums whose only recreation is obtained on the roads or pavements of the streets in which they live. They miss the health that comes from the fresh air of parks and open spaces, and the cramped conditions in which they live and play would seem to have a restricting effect upon their mental, if not their moral, development. At the same time it must be recognised that splendid men and women have come from these districts. In war and in work, heroes, leaders and skilled operatives have been found among men whose previous environment was anything but happy. That, however, is not an argument in favour of the continuation of the conditions that are to be found in many working-class districts; rather does it prompt the question how many more excellent citizens or patriots might have been produced from these districts if their children had grown up with plenty of space for exercise and plenty of opportunity for interest in flowers, plant life, and such subjects as draw attention away from the drabness of houses and streets. It also is fair to mention the dangers that arise from children playing in thoroughfares that carry a great deal of motor traffic. Playgrounds for children who have only the streets as a centre of amusement is one of the subjects to which attention has been given by the Civics Institute of Ireland. The report for 1940-1941, which has just been issued, states that no new playgrounds have been opened since June, 1939, owing to war conditions and lack of funds. For that reason the Recreation and Welfare Centre has been able to concentrate upon improving the work of the playgrounds already in existence. The report of the work done in connection with the playgrounds is so extensive that only a passing reference is possible. It is notable, however, that over 1,200 hours are spent by every child on the playgrounds in a year, whereas it spends only 800 hours in school. The need for organisation and supervision, or direction, in the playground might, therefore, be as big an undertaking as the planning of the child's studies in school. Singing, dancing, sewing and handicrafts are among the subjects in which the Institute's playgrounds staff give instruction; the children took part in the past year in an opera, in music and dancing, and broadcast programmes, and displays of their work have been held. This playgrounds scheme is so excellent that it is unnecessary for us to commend it. Its widespread extension, indeed, is highly desirable. More and more playing spaces are necessary in the city of Dublin. Commercial instincts should not be permitted to dictate the use to which vacant lots in the centre of Dublin may be put. If the war has taught us nothing else about town-planning, it should have brought home to everybody the importance of open spaces, and plenty of them, in cities which are liable, as virtually every city in Europe seems to be liable, to be bombed from the air. The ordinary citizen may not be able to do much about the provision of playing spaces, but some may be able to answer the call of the Civics Institute for voluntary workers to help the play-leaders and specialists who deal with two thousand children daily. Unfortunately, the two thousand are only a small part of the 142,000 children in Dublin under 14 years of age; and, as the report states, an even more disturbing problem is that of providing organised recreation for the boys and girls who are turned out of the playgrounds when they reach the age of 14 and who are unable to find employment. That problem, we feel, is too big for any voluntary organisation to tackle except in a piecemeal way. It is both a municipal and a national problem, and, so far, there has been little indication that either municipal or national leaders have shown much concern about it.

Smokes for Women

The smokers' lot is becoming more difficult every day. Apart entirely from the fact that tobacco now costs considerably more than it used to cost twelve months ago, it is not always possible to obtain the usual varieties of cigarettes, even at the high prices. Customers nowadays in Ireland must take what they get, but even at that rate they are in a happier position than customers in Great Britain, who are lucky to get anything at all. Up to the present tobacco in one form or another always has been forthcoming in this country, and although there have been many letters to the newspapers suggesting that the sale of cigarettes should be confined to men, such a step never has been considered either desirable or necessary. In Great Britain, however, many of the dealers and shopkeepers have taken it upon themselves to reserve their supplies of tobacco and cigarettes for men, and more particularly for members of the forces. In some cases they have refused to sell cigarettes to women altogether; in others they have made the rule that no woman can buy more than ten cigarettes at a time. Many reasons have been offered for this distinct prejudice on behalf of the male population, but, according to reports, most shopkeepers seem agreed that women are troublesome customers. Men, who have been regular buyers of a certain brand of cigarettes for years, never make a fuss when the shortage interferes with the supply, but peacefully accept anything which they are given. Women buyers, on the other hand, become angry and abusive when refused more than a small packet of cigarettes, and accuse the dealers of hiding supplies. No doubt, the decision of the shopkeepers and dealers will meet with widespread approval among the male members of the community, but it is, according to a Daily Telegraph reporter, entirely without official backing from the trade organisation, the National Union of Retail Tobacconists. In an interview the General Secretary of the Union stated that women are just as profitable customers as men, and that there is no reason to suppose that they enjoy cigarettes any less than men. On the whole, we are inclined to agree with the decision of the union. There is, perhaps, some justification for showing preference in the case of members of the forces, but, as regards the ordinary men, there does not seem to be any logical reason why they should receive preferential treatment.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

The Charms of Damascus

The city of Damascus, which has been prominent in recent war news, is one of the most interesting cities in the world. It has a delightful situation, with the heights of Anti-Lebanon on three sides. From these hills flows the River Barada, which divides into two branches at Damascus, and later has further subdivisions valuable to the great Plain of Damascus.

Damascus is one of the oldest of cities, having been founded by the Biblical Uz, the grandson of Shem. It presents a charming spectacle, with its rich wooded background and its many imposing mosques

The principal of these is the great mosque, with its dome 120 feet high, first erected early in the eighth century, taking the place of a Christian church which itself had replaced a heathen temple.

In the south-western suburb of Meidan is "the Gate of God," famous as the starting-place of the Haji, the great pilgrimage to Mecca.

Damascus gives its name to the damson plum, so favoured in times of peace by jam-makers.

Oil for the "Shuilers"

Wondering how the "Shuilers" are getting on this summer, what with the food shortage and the fuel shortage and everything else, I asked an ardent hosteller who has just finished a tour how things were with him.

It seems they are not doing too well this year. They are most affected by the shortage of paraffin oil, as all the heat and light in the hostels are derived from this fuel. They still have wood fires, of course, but it is not so easy for twenty people to cook a meal over an open fire at the one time, and the "fry," which used to be so popular with all true hostellers, has had to go. Members of An Oige now are advised to bring sufficient cold food with them to keep them going.

Ireland, as far as I know, is the only country in Europe in which hostelling is carried on at the present time, and it would be, indeed, a pity if our hostels had to close down for want of fuel. But from what I hear of the "Shuilers," they are not going to let a little thing like paraffin oil get between them and their reputation.

Water Polo Babies

There was a time—many years ago—when mention of the game of water polo always used to make one think of a group of bathers languidly flicking a large ball to and fro to relieve the monotony of a short bathe.

The other day I had my eyes opened by an enthusiast from National University. The game, he tells me, lasts for twenty-five minutes, during which time any player who is not completely fit develops, either in rapid succession or all at once, terrible aches in all muscles, a splitting headache, and an almost unconquerable desire to get sick. The well-trained player, my friend assures me, escapes with merely the splitting headache.

All these hardships, you must remember, constitute some of the charms of the game, and are often supplemented by elbows in the face, knees in the kidney, and several mouthfuls of salt water with a dash of lime.

Nor is that all. I learned that these Spartans start their season some weeks before you or I have discarded our overcoats!

The Motto Stone

All over Ireland there are wishing-stones of one type or another, and every one of them has some sort of condition that you have to fulfil before you get your wish.

In Glendalough you must be able to make your arms reach right around the wishing cross; in Killiney, as far as I remember, you have to walk right around the obelisk one way to the top and then turn around and walk down the opposite direction.

In Avoca the Motto Stone has, I think, the most delightful condition of all. You must walk three times around it without thinking of a goat, climb up on top of it and wish. Considering that the countryside is literally crawling with goats of all shapes and sizes, the chances of forgetting them are pretty slim, and, besides, the act of remembering what not to think of is enough to put goats unshakably into your mind.

It rather reminds me of the old idea of seeing a piebald horse and remembering not to think of his tail. I have never seen a piebald horse yet that his tail was not the most prominent part of his anatomy.

Tom Moore's Tree

Still on the subject of Avoca, I have often wondered why Tom Moore chose such an uninspiring spot to write his "Sweet Vale of Avoca." There are several other vantage points in the Vale, any of which is about ten times as beautiful as the approved site, if, indeed, the approved site is authentic, which I do not for one moment believe.

Incidentally, the last time I was there I heard a most amusing comment on the whole business. A mother was explaining to her little girl that she was looking at the tree under which Moore sat while he wrote that famous song. "There is Not in the Wide World a Valley so Sweet."

The child took a good look at the tree and then said: "That's an awful old thing. Why didn't he go up the hill where there are nice green trees?"

I hear, too, although I do not altogether believe it, that since Tom Moore's day there have been several authentic trees, all of which were destroyed in thunderstorms only to reappear a few days later not one whit the worse.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

The Mystery of Modern Europe

Who is to Blame for the War?

By AODH DE BLACAM

Seven Mysteries of Europe. By Jules Romains. Translated from the French by Germaine Bree. London: Hutchinson. 12/6 net.

AS a member of a P.E.N. Club in Ireland, I am somewhat distressed to learn that M. Romains is the top nib of all the pens—if such an expression is permissible. His book is a first-personal series of essays on M. Daladier, General Gamelin, King Leopold III., and other figures in the drama of the death of Europe's peace; and, if we are to believe him, he is the man who could have saved Europe if only he had had his way.

I remember a similar book by Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, published during the last war, in which the writer recalled all the good advice he had given to the rulers of the nations, in vain. Neither book convinces me. The world's affairs are moved by forces, spiritual and material, far greater than the compass of the Socialistic mind.

So far as I can make out the working of M. Romains's mind, his hope was to effect a union of the Left elements in France and Germany, whereby a clash between the two great antagonists would be averted. He surprised his Socialist comrades by going to Nazi Germany to lecture, and he was mildly surprised himself, apparently, when some National Socialists met him half-way.

Back to Charlemagne

There were men in the New Germany who talked of going back, not to Versailles, not to Westphalia, to restore old history, but away back to A.D. 843, when the Frankish Empire was split into Germany and France. They dreamed of undoing the division of the Franks, and building Europe anew as Charlemagne planned it. The thoughts of the new Germany were molten, and might have been run into the mould of a peacefully united continent if—if what?

That question is the underlying mystery of mysteries in M. Romains's view of recent affairs. He considers that M. Daladier failed woefully to rise to his opportunity, and discusses the reason with a degree of personal frankness not usual in books published in London and in the English language.

He distributes blame, however, pretty generously. Few of the statesmen of the Allied lands escape his censure. He does not spare Germany, however, though his account of Herr Abetz is wistfully regretful for an idealist whose dream went awry. To M. Romains the critical figure in Germany is Herr von Ribbentrop, and he gives a curious account of Herr Hitler wavering in mind in some interview when a telling case was made the Fuehrer's policy, until von Ribbentrop, seated at a side table and silent until now, spoke quiet, icy words of resolution, and the German leader hardened.

"Wait and See"

England has been victim of her policy of "wait and see," which, as someone said, means "Wait and don't see, wait and don't act." Her procrastination, M. Romains argues, springs from that unique character of English nationality by which a series of totally unco-ordinated institutions work independently for English interests, according to their private lights. These institutions are effective in respect of their own ends, but there is no single mind and responsible authority, as in more logically-constituted nations. Accordingly, things are done in England's name which embarrass the nation, and complaints are lost on the unheeding air. M. Romains cites the example of Syria, where French officials were firmly convinced that England was pursuing a policy hostile to French interests, while, in truth, the agents responsible were playing their own hand, uncontrolled by high State direction.

Only in mortal crisis does English policy fuse into a unit, and then, M. Romains would say, it is sometimes too late for England's friends. In this we are reminded of Mr. Shaw's Larry Doyle, complaining that the Tom Broadbents are careful never to let their right hands know what their left are doing.

An unsatisfying, but interesting, book.

Facing the Facts

Let's Face the Facts. London: The Bodley Head. 5/- net.

EARLY in 1940 the Director of Public Information of Canada brought twenty-four well-known people, including Miss Dorothy Thompson, Alexander Woolcott, James Hilton, Miss Clare Boothe and W. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, to the microphone to broadcast to the people of Canada under a general heading of "Let's Face the Facts." This book embodies twenty of these lectures, which, although inclined to be slightly unneutral, provide entertaining reading.

The outstanding contribution is that of Miss Thompson, who paints excellent, if biassed, pen pictures of Winston Churchill and Hitler. A violent attack on Colonel Lindbergh is contained in Robert E. Sherwood's address. Lindbergh, he says, is a tragic example of mental aberration, a man spiritually diseased, whose opinions are unpopular with all real Americans.

Miss Clare Boothe, another of "The Women," pays a striking tribute to the morale of the British people after the collapse of France, and warns her own countrymen against the dangers of fifth-columnists.

The remaining lectures consist of either the reminiscences of Americans and Canadians who served with the Allied Forces during the last war, or eye-witness accounts of the invasion of the Low Countries and life in Britain under war conditions, written by well-known American war correspondents.

History and Growth of the British Empire

Ideas and Ideals of the British Empire. By Ernest Barker. London: Cambridge University Press. 3/6.

THIS new volume in the "Current Problems" series is written by the general editor, Professor Barker. As befits a professional historian, it is a factual work which owes little to the art of the modern journalist propagandist.

It briefly outlines the history and growth of the successive British Empires, discusses the development of the Commonwealth of Nations, and makes a few passing references to the somewhat anomalous position of Eire. The peculiar position of the Indian Empire is also discussed in some detail.

Throughout the whole discussion, and especially when concerned with the dependen. Empire, the English genius for compromise is everywhere apparent—that capacity for seeing all problems from a practical rather than a theoretical point of view. That essentially English form of pragmatism is the chief cornerstone of the British Empire, and in discussing democratic ideology it has ever a foremost place.

The Ancient Regime in Many Lands

The Life of Viscount Mersey

A Picture of Life: 1872-1940. By Viscount Mersey. London: John Murray. 18/- net.

DEPUTY-SPEAKER and Whip of the House of Lords, Viscount Mersey has lived a full life, travelling far; acting in great events, meeting men of all nations, ranks and vocations.

His memories go back far, and rise to interest in a time so strangely different from our own as the 'nineties, when a young Guards officer lived gaily—leapt from a raided club's windows—and varied military studies with sport, not caring much for the graver things of life, though he saw service in the East, and was at Basra in 1896, little guessing what history would be made in that Iraq city in days to come.

In 1897 the British Consul-General at Warsaw died, and the future Lord Mersey was sent thither to lock up the archives. He went on to St. Petersburg, "a fascinating place," and so saw the ancien régime in Russia and Russian Poland. He found Russian easier to learn than German. He was in Greece during the Turco-Greek campaign, in Constantinople later, and then in Manchuria and Western China. All that he saw he records in a matter-of-fact style.

In 1902 he was at the Viceregal entourage in Dublin, and saw Ireland's ancien régime, too. "Eight aides-de-camp were now present, and we all lived in the Castle. Each week there was a fresh party of twenty or thirty guests staying in the house, with two Gallery dinners of seventy, two Throne Room dances, and either a Drawingroom, Levée, State Ball or Banquet in St. Patrick's Hall. The stables were kept full of horses, and every lady staying in the castle was informed each morning by the groom of the chambers that a brougham and victoria were at her disposal for the day. All this cost a lot of money, and though the Lord Lieutenant received £20,000 a year from public funds, he spent as much again out of his own private income." (So the author was informed by three viceroys—Lords Spencer, Londonderry and Cadogan.)

"For the A.D.C. life was a round of amusement, political affairs playing no part in it. . . . At the State dinners in St. Patrick's Hall 105 guests were present, with eighty servants waiting."

Lord Mersey was at the Dardanelles in 1915, and later his experiences in the Near East gave him scope to check Mr. Compton Mackenzie's writings on that subject. He had four narrow escapes from death during the war. He was at the Peace Conference—where was he not? In Rome in 1934 he saw the new Italian orientation developing, but he does not seem to have appreciated what was afoot. He was in Germany two years later, and found everybody healthy and well clothed, but unsmiling. "After Germany, Paris seemed rich, warm and alive. His book closes with a description of his library of 10,000 books, including 80 incunabula; he had built him a perfect home, when war crashed upon all homes, and the world that his life was spent in ended.

A German in Great Britain

Criticism of British Propaganda

Help Us Germans to Beat the Nazis! By Heinrich Fraenkel. Gollancz. 2/6.

THE phrase "A German Opposition" has an unfamiliar ring about it, yet, according to the author, who wrote this book while in an internment camp in the Isle of Man, and who has since been released, such an opposition actually exists.

He devotes a whole chapter to an attempt to justify this statement, and he describes the extensive measures taken by the German authorities to combat any anti-Nazi tendencies.

The very fact that concentration camps are in existence is, according to the author, sufficient proof that the opposition is still alive, and goes on to state that during the last seven years about two millions of this opposition have passed in and out of these camps. Quoting actual figures, he claims that since the war hardly a day has passed without at least one member of the community becoming a victim of what Goering once called "the good old German custom of the axe."

He points out that British propaganda, which is the weapon which will "help us Germans to beat the Nazis," lacks consistency, and urges that the three methods of propaganda—radio broadcasts, leaflets and direct distribution through underground channels—be employed simultaneously and repeatedly.

This is an extremely bitter book; in fact, it is hard to credit that any man could be so bitter about his own country.

Ex Libris

DONAGH MacDONAGH

I WAS looking for something to read the other evening, and, running my finger along the shelf where I keep plays, I stopped at a little rusty-coloured book, "The Weavers," by Gerhardt Hauptmann. Though it has been lying there for years, I have never read it.

I took it down, blew the dust off the top, and had a look at the cover. "The Plays of Gerhardt Hauptmann. Volume III.," it said. "The Weavers. A Drama in Five Acts. Price 1/6, or in cloth, 2/6. London: William Heinemann." That seemed to be all the information which it was likely to give away, but I noticed a faint signature in ink half-way up the cover—"Jas. A. Joyce." That did not mean very much to me, so I had a look inside.

Here again there was the same signature "Jas. A. Joyce," with a flourish, an underlining squiggle, and a date, "January, 1900." Then I realised that I had been harbouring for years a little bit of Joyce's past. The A stands, of course, for the Augustus (or was it Augustine?) which he dropped early in life.

Living in Luxury

He tells in the "Portrait" how he won an exhibition when he was seventeen or eighteen, and how he spent the money in the luxuries of books and good deeds:

"For a swift season of merry-making the money of his prizes ran through Stephen's fingers. Great parcels of groceries and delicacies and dried fruits arrived from the city. Every day he drew up a bill of fare for the family and every night led a party of three or four to the theatre to see "Ingomar" or "The Lady of Lyons." In his coat pockets he carried squares of Vienna chocolate for his guests while his trousers' pocket bulged with masses of silver and copper coins. He bought presents for everyone, overhauled his room, wrote out resolutions, marshalled his books up and down their shelves, pored upon all kinds of price lists, drew up a form of commonwealth for the household by which every member of it held some office, opened a loan bank for his family and pressed loans on willing borrowers so that he might have the pleasure of making out receipts and reckoning the interests on the sums lent. When he could do no more he drove up and down the city in trams."

Of course, the money soon ran out, the luxuries stopped and the books were sold, among them the little one and sixpenny copy of The Weavers. That may have influenced some word, some phrase, some nuance somewhere in his work, but I can give no hint as to where that influence lies, since I have still not gone further than the Dramatis Personae at the beginning.

Other Signatures

What I did instead when I recognised the signature was to search through my books to see if I had any or many more signed copies. By dint of flattery and cajolery I have acquired the signatures of some of the most highly regarded writers of the present day, and by the mere act of survival I have succeeded in inheriting a number which date from the early days of the century. Further back I have no ambitions and no possessions.

The spidery scrawl of Sir Thomas Browne adorns no calf-bound volume, my Shakespeare Folios could be counted on the fingers of one hand, but most of the Maunsel publications bear their recognisable hallmark of authenticity. James Stephens, Seumas O'Sullivan, Seosamh Mac Cathmhaoil, Padraic Colum and many others have left their mark on the paper, but as I look at these famous names I sometimes have an uneasy feeling that even in those early days a Flann O'Brien may have been loose on the land. That man is a menace with a pen. Give him any book and he will sign it with any signature. During the recent Book Fair he was going round abstracting books from under his friends' arms and signing them with names like Oliver Goldsmith, T. S. Eliot and James Clarence Mangan. Had the Book of Kells been on view he would undoubtedly have autographed it.

Lend him a book and you may sigh for it for months. Nag him long enough he will return it eventually with a graceful inscription: "Presented to D. MacDonagh by Flann O'Brien. With love from all at Number Ten." A menace did I say? A fiend! A friend of his knew that he was in correspondence with one of the Masters of English prose and ingenuously desired him to have one of the Great Man's works autographed for him.

O'Brien took the book, of course, put it on a shelf and promptly forgot all about it. Many months later the patient friend enquired if any word had been heard from the Master. Without a blush O'Brien assured him that by a curious coincidence the book had arrived back that morning, went home, whipped out his pen and signed it affectionately. His friend still lives in an eejit's paradise.

Faded Ink

Who will blame me, therefore, if I sometimes look at the inscriptions on my books with some distrust. Is the signature on Hauptmann's "Weavers" really that of Joyce at all, or did O'Brien supply it some dull evening? He probably carries a pen full of faded ink in his pocket. And Colum and Stephens, and Eliot and the rest of them? Are they also his work? The only one of which I can be absolutely sure is his own. And of that I am sometimes a little doubtful.

A curious incident occurred some time ago. A foreign poet was visiting my house and in the course of the evening discovered some of his books which I had carefully hidden away (I wouldn't cock him up to think I had them). Seeing that he had discovered them, I asked him to sign one particular volume, which I was indiscreet enough to indicate was the only one of his which had secured my admiration. Fair enough. He signed it and the conversation took a less controversial turn for some moments.

Next morning I looked for the four or five books of his works to replace them on their shelf, but my amazement was almost comic when I discovered that they had all disappeared. All but the one signed copy. What happened to them? I shall probably never know. But sometimes I have an uneasy vision of Flann O'Brien sitting at home industriously signing every page.

FRAGMENT OF A WISH

By THOMAS O'BRIEN.

IN a room heavy with the stale silence of an ended day
I brood and brooding feel the sorrow
Of a day that is no more and for all significance
Might not have been. Had this day slipped the calendar
And all its faces melted as slow time will have it,
Quickly, from dream to dream, and left a soundless world
Where only soul touched soul, like breath on breath,
And nothing moved save thought. What then?
There is no answer but the wish sweeps through me
That a day would pass like that and give me rest.

Two Recent Novels

Spinners Lake. By Maude Harrison. London: Bodley Head. 10/6 net.

WHETHER this is a "healthy" book or not is open to discussion. It is not, for example, for the shelves of the twopenny libraries; but it is a book for those who appreciate skilful construction and good writing.

"Spinners Lake" is a mental home to which a woman journalist goes for treatment as a voluntary patient. Every phase of life in the hospital, almost every phase of the acute mental torment of the patient, is presented for dissection.

The book is autobiographical in style—obviously the only style in which such a "personal" story could be written effectively—and covers a period of six months. It brings the reader into contact with a wide variety of minds in various stages of suffering—many of them recovering from the strain of modern life and preparing to take their place in the world again.

The writing of this book has carried the pathological novel to its logical conclusion. A short time ago Mr. William Seabrook, an admirable author of travel books, wrote his personal experiences in a mental home in "Asylum"; now Miss Harrison's novel uses a mental home for her novel—why this pathological trend?

The impinging of the mental state of the patient in "Spinners Lake" on a nerve-strained reader (and there are many in these days) would do no good; but the book is undoubtedly a strangely-conceived and well-developed account of the months during which the wind (for, at least, one patient) shifted from north-north-west to south.

Sailor, Sailor. By Dorothy Black. Joseph. 8/- net.

For those who like light, readable fare this new novel by Miss Dorothy Black is just the thing. Well written in very natural dialogue, with an expressive nautical tang in its atmosphere and language, the story is one of love adventure in our time, and all that is best in the spirit of the British nation is personified in the characters of this most enjoyable story.

The plot centres around Stephen, younger son in the Kinderaley family. Lady Kinderaley, a British matron of the "battleship" type, is determined that "Margarettings" and the Kinderaley baronetcy will not pass to cousin Ralfe Weston, family black sheep, and so she directs all her energies to get Cecil, her adored elder son, married. Cecil, however, is killed on active service with the R.A.F., and it falls to Stephen to fulfil family obligations; it is with this fulfilling that the story is concerned. In its course we meet Briony Chester, the heroine; Star Kennedy, "the statuesque blonde that gentlemen are supposed to prefer," and Ralfe Weston, a most natural character, the not too bad villain of the piece.

YES, WE HAVE NO BLOODS TO-DAY

CELTIC CRIMES WITH SOCIAL SIGNIFICANCE

THE PROBLEM AND THE SOLUTION

ENGLISH Literature was my old headmaster's forte. He would never tire of telling us the sort of books that we should read to improve our English Grammar and our Immortal Souls at one and the same time; for ever explaining to us how vastly superior was Edgar Poe to Edgar Wallace, and why we should read Shelley's "Adonais" in preference to his wife's "Frankenstein."

One day I turned up to school on time. As I had been uniformly late for approximately sixty consecutive days, he thought that there must be something serious wrong in our household, and, accordingly, he sent for me. I went to the study wondering what to expect, and found him reading a book. "Ah," I thought, "Now I shall see for myself what the Great Champion of High Art reads off duty. Now I shall find out the Truth-About-Literature." And all the time he was talking I was trying to get a glimpse of what he was reading.

At last I succeeded when for a split second he relaxed his vigilance and allowed the book to appear cover upwards above the edge of the table. It was "The Case of the Poisoned Fly," by some bloodthirsty nonentity. It was some time before I forgave him, for at that period of my life I was passing through the poetic stage, and I was completely intolerant of anybody who did not read poetry—or, at least, arty prose—all the time.

* * *

What They Read Off Duty

Any time after that in class when he dared to make any reference to literature I would snigger in schoolboy fashion, give my equally idiotic companion an unmerciful dig in the ribs, and say as loudly as I dared, "What about the Poisoned Fly?"

Within the last few years, however, I have come to the conclusion that the old boy was right; there were no flies—poisoned or otherwise—on him. Recently I made an inventory among my friends and acquaintances to find what they read off duty, and I discovered, much to my surprise, that, whereas three civil servants and two insurance clerks read "Poetry and The Drama," five schoolmasters, three artists, two small novelists and one large editor all read "bloods" almost exclusively. As a matter of fact, let it be whispered, I myself have since developed an insatiable appetite for bloods, provided that they are reasonably "blue" bloods. The consumption of bloods in this country has rapidly been increasing, and, as Mr. Roger McHugh once pointed out, they are all imported "red-hot" from Britain, or were up till recently.

* * *

Oh, Dear, What Can The Matter Be?

Now they are not being imported in anything like the same qualities, because they are not being produced in anything like the same quantities. In fact, if the rate goes on decreasing in the present distressing fashion the fountain soon will cease to flow altogether, and we will be forced to live an utterly anæmic existence. I cannot think what has happened.

Have the criminal prototypes all joined up and started to do deeds of great valour, murdering enemies instead of fellow-countrymen? Have all the blood-writers joined up? Are they all so busy doing and dying for king and country that they have no time to bother writing about the less worthy members of the race?

Whatever the reason, the result is more or less the same for the unfortunate consumer of bloods: he gets one or two novels in a week—unsatisfactory ones at that, for anybody that is murdered nowadays is murdered, alas, for political reasons—and a host of "Books About the War," that surely nobody but the unlucky reviewer ever bothers to read. The only thing left to do is to start reading the old crime stories all over again; but somehow or other foreknowledge rather takes the spice out of the mystery, and it is not so much fun trying to figure out who killed Cock Robin when you know perfectly well from the last time you read the book that it was the Sparrow.

* * *

The Only Way

There is only one other solution to the problem, a solution that was suggested some time ago by the aforementioned Mr. Roger McHugh. The solution is to write bloods ourselves; to form in this country a school of blood-writers. We have a radio station—a poor thing, but our own—we have writers, we have pens, typewriters; everything, in fact, that is requisite and necessary.

To start the ball rolling, I, myself, have planned an all-Irish blood, which, I think, should meet with the approval of Irish readers. I shall append a synopsis of it. I claim no copyright. If any of our Irish authors wish to turn it into a full-size novel they are at liberty to do so; pour moi, I have a date with Judy Clifford in ten minutes.

DRUIM-FHIONN DONN DHILIS,
Or
THE STORY OF THE POOR OLD COW.

Scene—In and around a thatched cottage in Old Mayo.

Characters—A cow (deceased), an old woman (almost ditto), a young girl, civic guards, a dark stranger, passers-by with Mayo accents ad lib., and a leprachaun.

[NOTE.—All characters in the synopsis are purely fictional and have no reference to any living persons, alive or dead.]

* * *

Start Reading Here

Chapter 1—The bean-sidhe is heard moaning. The cow is heard moaning. The old woman goes out to see what is the matter; then she is heard moaning, or, if you prefer it, keening. (If I were a Gael I should spell that caoining, but I'm Anglo-Irish, and proud of it. Just as proud of the Irish as the Anglo, but sufficiently Anglo to think that keen should be spent keen, just like that.)

Chapter 2—The Guards (Garda) are sent for, and arrive, complete with confiscated poteen. A leprachaun arrives to do a bit of scouting off his own bat, a sort of Celtic Lord Peter Whimsey.

Chapter 3—The leprachaun discovers that the cow has died from foot-and-mouth disease, which was administered by the dark stranger. The young girl (beautiful, of course, and called either Eileen or Mary, but not both) is in love with the dark stranger and helps him to escape. The chase begins.

After that all is plain sailing. This story, it may be pointed out, as well as being a perfect "blood," is also a perfect example of writing in the true Anglo-Irish tradition, calculated to stir up Celtic feelings to boiling point. In a last chapter, a sort of postface, which must be omitted by those in search of just a story, and eagerly read by those in search of patriotic clap-trap, it can be pointed out that the cow symbolises Ireland, and Eileen (or Mary) the traitor within the gates. The leprachaun is just brought in to utilise Mr. McHugh's suggestion about the Folklore Commission—delightful title—and the stranger—need I go any further?

I am eagerly awaiting the appearance of the first all-Irish "blood."

"The Bell" for June

The Bell. Edited by Sean O Faolain. Dublin: Cahill. 1/- net.

THIS month's issue of "The Bell" is in many ways the most interesting that has appeared for some time.

In the true Bell tradition, Michael Burke deals with restaurants in Dublin—rather on the lines of Flann O'Brien's article on public-houses. Sean O Faolain has written a most interesting article on his friend Liam Flaherty, and in the section "Public Opinion," Frank O'Connor and Dennis Ireland both take a crack at Mr. Louis D'Alton over his play, "The Money Doesn't Matter."

Anna Sheehy continues her instructive series of articles on lino- and woodcuts, dealing this month with Cecil ffrench Salkeld, one of whose woodcuts is reproduced in this page. Michael Farrell has contributed an excellent study of the drama at the Sligo Feis, and most of the usual features, such as "Mise Eire," are included.

There is no poetry this month, nor is the magazine any worse off without it.

Britain and The Neutrals

Stronger Action Required

Offensive Against Germany. By Sebastian Haffner. London: Secker and Warburg. 2/- net.

THIS is an eloquent plea for a stronger British policy through which she could take the leadership of the democratic world. Mr. Haffner holds that in the modern world there is not, and there cannot be, such a thing as a neutral. "He that is not with us is against us"—and must abide by the consequences.

He would like to see stronger action against France, against Spain, even against Ireland. Only when such action is taken will the peoples of the world realise that Britain is wholly in earnest and quite sincere in her desire that freedom and democracy shall prevail. Just as long as the old rules of international affairs are adhered to, just so long will confidence in Britain's aims be shaken.

Wars are not won by the military arm alone; propaganda to-day is a major offensive weapon. Mr. Haffner has plans for carrying warfare into the very heart of the enemy camp, and further plans for the present and ultimate reorganisation of Europe.

This is a most stimulating addition to the series known as "The Searchlight Books," and, whether one agrees or disagrees with the arguments and conclusions, it should be productive of much thought.

America's Foremost Gossip Writer

Walter Winchell. By St. Clair McKelway. Chapman and Hall. 5/- net.

"WALTER WINCHELL," a new biography by St. Clair McKelway, is very interesting, interesting from two points of view—the psychological one and the sociological one. It is another study of the rise of the persistent poor boy to fame and riches, this time by a hitherto unexplored route—writing gossip.

Also from the wider sociological aspect it shows the change in the ethical attitude of the Press towards the public, and the corresponding diminution of the powar of the Press in moulding public opinion.

Walter Winchell is America's foremost gossip writer, and since 1925, when he began his gossip-writing career, has revolutionised American journalism, and, according to Mr. McKelway, not to the advantage of journalism.

The book is typically American in its pithy tone, and is a penetrating sidelight on modern America. It is short and well worth reading.

HER FINGERS BEGAN TO SWELL

Woman's Alarm at Effects of Rheumatism

Took Kruschen Just in Time

A delay in using the proper treatment for her rheumatism almost resulted in this woman's hands being permanently disfigured. Describing the beginning of her trouble, she writes:—"Six years ago I began to have twinges of rheumatism in my joints, especially my shoulders and finger joints. These grew so bad that they prevented me sleeping at nights. Then I observed with horror that my aching finger joints were beginning to swell. The terrifying thought that my hands might become disfigured like others I'd seen sent me hustling to find a remedy. I tried everything I saw advertised—without avail. Then I bought a bottle of Kruschen Salts, and started it the following morning. After a couple of doses the pains lessened, then died away so effectively that during the past six years I have never had a recurrence. I shudder to think what they might have become had I not taken Kruschen Salts in time."—M. F.

Rheumatism is commonly caused by deposits of needle-pointed, flint-hard, uric acid crystals, which lodge in the muscles and joints. Kruschen breaks up these deposits of torturing crystals and converts them into a harmless solution, which is promptly removed through the natural channel—the kidneys.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Chemists. Price 1/9 per bottle.

COMPANY MEETING.

MILLING DIFFICULTIES

MESSRS. BOLANDS, LTD.

THE WHEAT POSITION

MR. D. J. DONOHOE.

THE fifty-third annual ordinary general meeting of Bolands, Ltd., was held yesterday at the head office of the company, Grand Canal Quay.

Mr. Daniel J. Donohoe, chairman of the company, presided. The other directors present were Messrs. John Quinn and Patrick Murphy.

Mr. Sean Curry, F.C.R.A., Secretary, read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report to the shareholders.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS

Ladies and Gentlemen,—The directors' report and accounts having been before you for the statutory period, I assume you will agree to take them as read. (Agreed.)

As you have seen, ladies and gentlemen, the profit for the year, which includes interest on investments, rents, etc., amounts to £24,604, and, when compared with the profit of last year, shows a reduction of £3,192, or approximately 11½ per cent. This substantial reduction is due to several factors, amongst the principal of which may be mentioned the formula fixing the price of batch bread. This formula, instituted by the Prices Commission in 1937 when conditions were fairly normal, and based on conditions then existing, still remains the instrument for determining the price of household bread. This means that the only factor considered to warrant a change in the price of bread is the rise or fall in the cost of flour. As the latter is only one of the component parts of the finished loaf, it is unfair that the other parts should be ignored in arriving at a fair price to the public.

BATCH BREAD

As I stated on a previous occasion, there has been an all-round increase in wages since 1937, and ingredients of all kinds required in the manufacture of bread have continued to advance in price, and particularly so during the past year and a half. For some considerable time there has been no profit on the manufacture and sale of batch bread, and the accounts of the various master bakers, which are in course of preparation for submission to the Prices Commission, will amply demonstrate that fact. It is expected that when these accounts are investigated the Commission will recommend that some form of relief be granted to the industry. We realise, however, that, as bread is an essential article of food, it is imperative that the cost of the loaf to the public be kept as low as possible. The margin of profit on the milling side of our business has also been considerably reduced during the emergency, and this is a definite help in maintaining the price of bread at the lowest possible figure.

RESTRICTED WHEAT SUPPLIES

Owing to the scarcity of imported wheat, due to shipping difficulties, the Minister for Supplies made several Orders during the year gradually increasing the extraction of flour from the wheat — hence the so-called "brown" loaf, a loaf which, in the opinion of those qualified to judge, is more wholesome and nutritious than the pure white article. I daresay, however, that there are some people with delicate digestions who will not agree with that opinion. If the shipping difficulties continue—and I do not see any prospect of their removal at present—definite obstacles will arise in the manufacture of bread next autumn, when other cereals will, almost certainly, have to be added to wheat for breadmaking. Still, I am glad to say that we had the experience of manufacturing similar bread during the last Great War, and I have no doubt that we shall overcome these obstacles and continue to turn out the best possible loaf in the circumstances. I should like here to warn the public that it is most essential that waste in bread should be avoided, especially during the emergency, and in their own interests, and the interests of the nation, householders should only order the minimum amount required, and see that every particle of the loaf is used solely for human consumption.

BRANCH EXTENSION AND A.R.P.

Last year I informed you that we had almost finished the remodelling, and consequent enlarging, of our bakery at Dun Laoghaire. This was completed during the period under review, and it is now one of the most up-to-date and modern bakeries in the country. It was very fortunate that we had this bakery in operation during the year, as, with the increased oven-space available, it materially helped to relieve the pressure on our main bakery at Grand Canal quay. Without that increase we could not possibly have met the expanding demand for our products.

During the year we built and fitted air-raid shelters for the protection of our employés, and we also have our own A.R.P. and fire-fighting squads, fully equipped and trained to protect the company's property if the occasion should arise. We sincerely hope, however, that the necessity to use these facilities will never occur.

The petrol shortage has caused us considerable difficulty [illegible]pense in our deliveries, and the [illegible] in providing alternative trar ort has amounted to a considerable sum. The industry has kept in constant touch with the Department of Supplies on this and other questions, and I must say that the officials of the Department gave us every assistance in their power. This applies in an especial way to the Controller.

BUDGET PROPOSALS

The recent Budget appeared at first sight to be generally popular, but further investigation revealed that in its original form it would have had the gravest effects on industry in general. I am glad to see that the Minister for Finance has now realised the gravity of his proposals, and, to some extent at least, intends to modify the Budget's objectionable clauses relating to retrospective assessments. The 33 1-3 per cent. increase in corporation profits tax, however, coupled with the 50 per cent. reduction in the exemption margin, will mean a substantial increase in the amount of tax payable by this company, and it is as well to note that this particular tax must be paid before any distribution of profits, and, unlike income tax, no portion of such payment can be recovered by a shareholder, even where the latter is not liable to a penny tax. I have no fault to find with the Minister's efforts to increase revenue during the emergency, but it is my opinion that the extra sum which can be obtained from increased taxation will be very small. Owing to the scarcity of raw materials and the ever-tightening restriction on trade, firms will find it very difficult to maintain, much less to exceed, the profits made during normal times. However, additional money has to be found somewhere, and apparently the Minister for Finance considers this the best and easiest way of finding it.

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

Now, coming back to the accounts before you, which, as I have already stated, show that the profit is down by £3,192. This is a substantial amount, being more marked when you take into consideration that our turnover for the year was considerably higher than the previous corresponding period. On the assets side of the balance sheet there is no change in the debtors, the investments are up by approximately £1,000, and the stocks and cash in hands are up by £3,668. On the liabilities side the sundry creditors are down by £4,113.

ALLOCATION OF PROFITS

The directors recommend the payment of a final dividend on the Ordinary Shares, which, with the interim already paid, will give the shareholders a return of 6¼ per cent. per annum. You will note that the payment for the second half-year is down by 1 per cent. as compared with 1940, while the Preference shareholders, of course, receive the same dividend as heretofore. No doubt, we could have paid the same Ordinary dividend as last year, but, in view of the uncertain times ahead, the directors are anxious to conserve the resources of the company. As in former years, we suggest placing £1,000 to the Employés' Benevolent Fund, and we are sure the shareholders will approve of this allocation. On the present occasion, however, we are not making any allocations to the renewal, depreciation or special outlay accounts, but instead we are creating a special reserve called a "Contingency Reserve," and to this account we are placing a sum of £10,000, which can be used to meet any unforeseen difficulties which may arise. This leaves a balance of £12,789 to be carried forward to the current year.

I am glad to report that the usual friendly relationship exists between the management and the employés, and we hope and believe that this state of things will continue.

And now, ladies and gentlemen, as I think there is no other matter which I ought to bring before you, I beg to move "that the report of the directors and accounts for the year ended 29th March, 1941, be, and are hereby, received and adopted."

Mr. Quinn seconded the resolution.

Mr. M. I. O'Meara said that he did not want to make any comments on the accounts, but he wished to say that, while the Government had placed almost dictatorial powers in the hands of the flour millers, he did not think it was wise that they should use these powers to the extreme limit. He suggested that, as was always the case previously, they should try and meet their customers in every possible way.

Chairman—Mr. O'Meara is entirely mistaken in his suggestion that the Government have placed dictatorial powers in the hands of the millers. It is the other way about. The millers are controlled in everything they do, and have to act on Government orders.

The resolution was put, and carried unanimously.

DIVIDENDS

On the motion of the chairman, seconded by Mr. Murphy, dividends were declared upon the Preference share capital of the company in respect of the half-year ended 29th March, 1941, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, less income tax, and upon the Ordinary share capital in respect of the half-year ended same date at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, free of income tax, warrants for said dividends to be issued on the 14th inst. to shareholders as now registered.

Mr. O'Rourke proposed that Mr. John Quinn, who retired by rotation, be re-elected director of the company.

Mr. Maurice Walsh seconded the resolution, which was passed unanimously.

Messrs. Crowley and Co. were re-elected auditors for the current year.

On the motion of Mr. O'Rourke, a vote of thanks was passed to the directors and staff for their work during the past year. The chairman having replied, the business of the general meeting concluded.

One Hundred Horses Declared to Run at Phœnix Park

Train—Westland Row, 1.50; Tara Street, 1.53; Amiens Street, 2.0.

ATTRACTIVE racing is promised at Phœnix Park this afternoon, where there will be big fields for the various events, one hundred horses having been declared to run. The Boyd-Rochfort T.Y.O. Plate will bring out the biggest field. Ballinter won the Brooke Plate at the last meeting in good style, and, though now having to carry increased poundage, must hold a big chance of scoring again.

Tote Double on Fourth and Sixth Races.

The Glenmaroon Hurdle has an open appearance, Senator, Sea Bachelor, Prince of Birds, Dundrin and Westlands all appearing to hold good chances. On the Powerstown Park running Prince of Birds and Dundrin must be close together wherever they finish, but the selection is Sea Bachelor, who has been running consistently well. Selections:—

Attractive Games This Week-end

TWO of the season's big matches will take place this week-end. This afternoon Phœnix will entertain Leinster in Phœnix Park, and to-morrow J. C. Boucher will captain a team against Leinster at Rathmines in aid of the Red Cross.

While Phœnix have a moderate record to date, they are an unpredictable team, and have the ability to gather runs rapidly. With E. A. Ingram in such splendid form, Leinster look to be the strongest side in Dublin, and I fancy them to win this afternoon, but it should be an excellent game.

Trinity, following their fine performance against D. R. Pigot's XI last Monday and Tuesday, seem likely to retain their lead in the competition at the expense of Pembroke; but the latter gave some sign of running into better form by their win over Clontarf last week.

Merrion and Clontarf ought to collect the maximum points from Civil Service and Y.M.C.A., respectively.

To-morrow's match will be an all-day affair, commencing at 11.30. Boucher has chosen a team comprising the most promising set of the younger men in the Dublin clubs. Their batting should be strong and attractive, since F. M. Quinn, Curley, Holloway and Caprani go for the runs without wasting any time, while the bowling, with Boucher, Ward, Warren and B. Quinn, has plenty of variety.

The Holders Beaten at Milltown

Failure to hole a putt of two feet on the eighth at Milltown last evening in the fifth round of the Irish Open Mixed Foursomes Cup was the turning point in the match between the holders, Comdt. Horgan and Mrs. Tod Randel, and Joseph Carr and Miss McIntyre. Leaving the seventh green the Milltown pair were two up and level fours. The holing of that putt for the win likely would have made all the difference; but a superb bunker shot by Horgan at the ninth assuredly saved that hole, which was halved. Then ensued a transformation. The holders were bunkered at the 10th, which they lost; another setback came at the 11th, and still more troubles at the 13th and 14th. Carr and his partner were then two up, and the remaining holes to the 17th were halved—a splendid recovery, indeed, by the winners.

The semi-finals and final will be played to-day.

FIFTH ROUND.

A. W. Briscoe (scr.) and Mrs. M. Slattery (8) beat J. W. Tunney (8) and Miss J. Reinders (12)—2 and 1.

J. Carr (scr.) and Miss McIntyre (7) beat Comdt. D. V. Horgan (5) and Mrs. Tod Randel (4) (holders)—2 and 1.

L. Howley (4) and Mrs. E. D. MacCormack (9) beat T. D. Purcell (3) and Mrs. Hickey (17)—3 and 2.

P. F. Murray (1) and Mrs. Murray (10) beat J. Lawlor (5) and Mrs. O'Grady (13)—2 and 1.

Quick-fire Play for Red Cross To-day

BY OUR LAWN TENNIS CORRESPONDENT.

QUICK-FIRE tennis between the best players in Ireland will provide a pleasant and interesting change from the usual run of matches at Fitzwilliam this afternoon, when the Red Cross American tournament will be held. The eight leading men in the country will meet over nine-game heats, and this unusual idea should provide plenty of excitement.

There will be two sections—"A" comprising R. J. Egan, H. J. Ryan, D. J. Murphy and B. Haughton, while in "B" we will see C. A. Kemp, A. E. Fannin, P. Read and J. J. McArdle pitted against each other. The players who score the highest number of games will meet in the final over one set, prior to which a women's doubles match will be played between Misses D. Curley and E. Lombard and Misses O. Poole and ... Nichols. These are the four first-ranked players in the country.

THE FAVOURITE

Naturally enough, the ability to start quickly will rule the men's competition. The strongest attacker in the country at present is Kemp, and, to my mind, he appears to be the favourite. He may not be consistent throughout the open tournament programme, but, almost without exception, his defeats are suffered after he has built up a strong position in the first set.

Although Egan is generally content to wait for his opponent's errors, a policy which has paid dividends over the last couple of years, he has got the ability to play the attacking game, and in the College Park on Thursday last he fairly swept Ryan off the court in the most aggressive display he has ever given.

Fannin and Ryan are both capable of coming through also. His reliable ground shots may make Fannin suitable to this unusual type of competition, while
